How to Evacuate at Home . . .

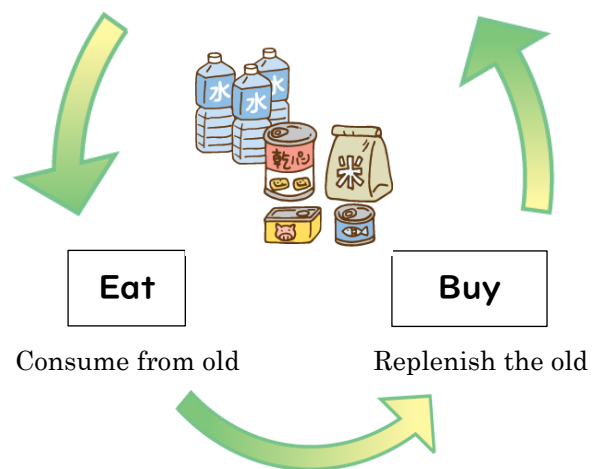

Home evacuation is a way to evacuate at home when there is no risk of collapse or burnout in time of a earthquake.

You can receive supplies at the evacuation center, while staying at home. It is important for each household to prepare for an earthquake on a daily basis, such as stockpiling water, food, and daily necessities.

Consider the Placement Space for Furniture

Arrange furniture layouts to avoid blocking the doors and evacuation routes. Do not put things around doorway or hallway of the room, considering the direction of placement, paying attention to the protruding drawers.
